The first sunlight shone like honey on Lake Bangweulu's calm water. John Mumana woke up in his simple hut and reached for his holy book to read and pray. Then, he took his fishing nets, which were essential for his life and traditions. The morning air felt fresh, and he could hear the gentle sounds of the lake and the calls of birds. John was a fisherman and lived by the natural rhythm of the world around him. He did not talk much. He let the lake tell him what to do. Today, the water was still, reflecting the sky. It looked like a great day for fishing.
