Governance in Pre-Colonial Zambia

Governance is as old as humanity. All societies on earth had at least one form of governance or another. Societies such as the Ngonis, Bembas, Tumbukas, Lozis and Lundas were ruled by Kings. Rulers had absolute power over people. The people under their rule were answerable to them. The king or queen was at the apex of the government hierarchy. Below him or her came chiefs. The village headmen or headwomen came right at the bottom, overseeing the villages. The family was headed by a father.

Trees are very important to both man and animals. Without trees, we cannot live well. We make charcoal from trees. Trees attract rainfall which makes it necessary for the growth of crops. We get caterpillars from trees. Timber comes from trees too. The president of Zambia said that there is need to plant trees every year to replace our lost trees. Cultivation, timber production and clearing land for new towns is one way we lose trees. This has made animals and insects lose their homes. Therefore, we need to protect our trees.
